What is Sock Yarn?

Sock yarn, also known as fingering weight yarn, is a lightweight yarn traditionally used for knitting socks. It typically ranges from 75 to 80 yards per 50 grams and boasts a smooth, fine composition that lends itself to intricate stitch work. Sock yarns are often made from a blend of fibers, including merino wool, nylon, and sometimes silk, offering durability, elasticity, and softness. Their thinness allows for detailed patterning without added bulk, making them ideal for scarves that require a delicate drape.

Key characteristics of sock yarn include:

- Fine weight, suitable for detailed patterns
- Durable and elastic, maintaining shape over time
- Often machine washable, depending on fiber content
- Wide variety of colorways, from solids to variegated and tonal options

What is Kidsilk Haze?

Kidsilk Haze is a lightweight, fuzzy yarn produced by Rowan Yarns, composed of a blend of mohair and silk—typically around 70% mohair and 30% silk.
